

Brandon Patterson's 2013 Canadian Football League Mock Draft (UPDATED):

SECOND ROUND

#10) Edmonton- Brett Jones (OL)

*Edmonton continues to rebuild their offensive line. Drafting Jones helps the Eskimos step closer to an all Canadian offensive line.

#11) Winnipeg- Nolan MacMillan (OL)

*With this selection, Winnipeg takes a prospect with great potential at one of the most important positions for non-imports. MacMillan may need more time to develop than a player like Matt Sewell, but he's certainly worth the pick.

#12) BC- Jesse Joseph (DL)

*The lions use this draft pick to add depth to their defensive line. Joseph gives BC a player who can play along Jabar Westerman down the road.

#13) Calgary- Seydou Haidara (Rec)

*Changed from Co Prime \(LB\)

*With this selection, Calgary takes a player who can step in on the offensive rotation when needed. Haidara shows great potential and ability to learn the game and grow into a starting receiver. With NFL interest, Co Prime (LB) slides down the draft.

#14) Montreal- Andy Mulumba (DL)

*Montreal uses this selection to take a player who could potential start on their defensive line. While its a risk because of NFL interest, Mulumba at number 14 is too good for Montreal to pass on.

#15) Hamilton- Kristopher Robertson (DB)

*Changed from Bo Lokombo \(LB\)

*The Ti-Cats take Robertson with the 15th overall selection. One, to add depth to their defensive back field. Two, to have a kick returner prospect on the team in case things do not work out with current returner Chris Williams (Rec). With multiple draft prospect signing NFL deals, Bo Lokombo goes higher than #15.

#16) Calgary- Kalonji Kashama (DL)

*Changed from Hosan Shanin \(DL\)

*Calgary adds another solid prospect to their future defensive line by selecting Kashama at 16.

#17) Toronto- Stefan Charles (DL)

*Winning the 2012 Grey Cup gives Toronto the confidence to select an Elite Canadian prospect with significant NFL interest. This very risky move could turn out to be nothing more than hope down the road. But if Charles does end up in the CFL, the Argo's have their new star defensive tackle.
